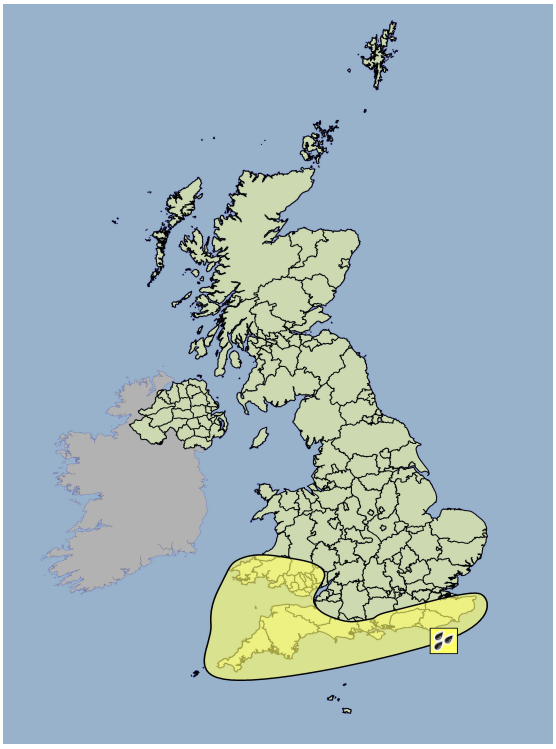
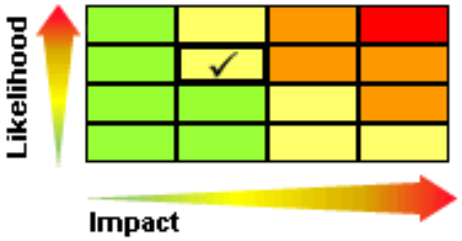
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An active frontal system will continue to move east across England and Wales overnight, bringing a spell of rain, locally heavy, followed by some heavy showers. Rainfall accumulations of 10 to 20 mm are likely quite widely, with locally 35 mm over south-facing hills. With most of this rain falling in around 6 hours there is the likelihood of some surface water flooding.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 21:00 on Wed, 06th Jan 2016 until 08:30 on Thu, 07th Jan 2016

Rain, heavy at times, now across South Wales and southwest England, will move east across other southern parts of England overnight, clearing most parts early on Thursday morning.

Please be aware of the likelihood of some surface water flooding, with some travel disruption possible. In addition, strong south to southeasterly winds will reach gale force for a time around exposed coasts and hills.

This is an update to extend the warning eastwards across southern England.
